The Arrest of Tynan and His Fellow

Would Like to Use America as a Catspaw.

LONDON, Sept. 19.—A series of cabinet conferences will begin about the middle of October, continuing with the usual intervals till the end of November. Parliament, according to arrangements made prior to the recess, will resume on or about Jan. 10. The measure which the ministers have to discuss in council include a revised education bill, a military works bill, and probably an Irish local government measure. The prevalent notion in political quarters is that the government does not mean to touch this crucial Irish question until the last session of the present parliament in 1901, when they would readjust Irish representatives, reducing the number of Irish members in the imperial parliament and generally weakening, as far as possible, the nationalist strength in parliament. But in the best informed official circles, it is known that some intervention exists in Lord Salisbury's and Mr. Balfour's minds to deal in the coming session with Irish local government, but the United Associated Presses' representative can state that instructions have been given to the treasury to prepare reports connected with a new system of administration in Ireland. Mr. Chamberlain was understood to have been among those who deem the government ill-advised in promoting such a bill till the seven years of parliament is about up. But he is said to have altered his opinion in view of a possible Irish crisis, and he is said to have gained knowledge of how dangerous the situation in Ireland is becoming.

ON RELIABLE AUTHORITY

WILL BECOME ACUTE.
So far from the Irish question having subsided, it will be long become acute, through the revival of the old physical force methods. The recurrence of disturbances in the north and the terrorism in the country, is so acute and widespread as to have evoked the alarm of the authorities of Dublin castle and the anxiety of the Catholic clergy. Fenianism are not obscure. Action for home rule through parliamentary acts is everywhere recognized as a failure. Neither Dillon, Healy nor Redmond, nor any grouping of party politicians in convention can longer get credit from young Ireland as agents for Irish independence. The party in parliament needs the help of old forms of agitation, which will keep the English mind alive to the truth of the Irish question has not "subsided."

RENEW THE OUTRAGES
The arrest of Tynan and his fellow conspirators is already taken as proof in certain quarters that the physical force party, which has remained quiet for a number of years, has finally determined to that some time ago almost caused consternation among the British officials and by this means force upon the government the knowledge that a refusal to pass a home rule bill does not put an end to the Irish question.

In other and more extended circles it is becoming the accepted view that the Tynan plot and its denouement on the eve of the czar's visit to France has long been known and that it was suggested by the Scottish and English press. The Irish nationalist papers scout the notion that the alleged conspiracy has any connection with a resurrection of secret societies in Ireland.

A LIFE AND DEATH STRUGGLE with the employers, is a name and nothing more. When Tom Mann speaks of a million and a half of men organized in Hamburg, Antwerp, Rotterdam, Bremen and in sympathetic union with the dock laborers of America, he means a million and a half of men, but the public refuse to be roused as they were during the strike when Cardinal Manning, the archbishop of Canterbury and other dignitaries intervened to get the dock laborers their delusive six pence. The dock companies and the ship owners are quite prepared for a big strike. But let the agitators say what they may it will not occur.

The return to Constantinople of Sir Philip Currie, the British ambassador to Turkey, has not yet resulted in any public developments of a striking nature. The globe and other British papers which at first threw doubt on the statement that Lord Salisbury had determined to take independent action against the event of further massacres, now admit that there are signs of a

"STRONGER BRITISH POLICY"
which will venture far in direct coercion of the ports. It must be confessed, however, that this policy seems devoid of application. Newspaper articles as those which have appeared in the Pall Mall Gazette relative to the Christian subjects of the ports through an alliance between Great Britain and the United States and Italy also tend to show that England is not over anxious to undertake by herself the settlement of the Turkish difficulties. Cynical observers of events say that Great Britain will never be able to use the United States as a cats paw for drawing the eastern chestnuts out of the fire.

Nothing Weakens the Constitution
More effectively than fever and ague. That nerve destroying malady, when once it takes firm root, subverts every function, exhausts the physical energies, impoverishes the blood and clouds the mental faculties. No actual resistance can be offered to its destructive career by the use of the pernicious drug, quinine. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will, however, be found all sufficient either for its eradication or prevention. Those conditions of the system, such as bilious, constipated habit, or lack of vitality, which are favorable to the contraction of the disease, are speedily reformed by this pure and efficient alternative and invigorant, which not only regulates the system, but gives a healthful impulse to the various organs, whose activity is the best guaranty of health. The consciousness of action is the chief characteristic of this leading specific and preventive, which is eminently adapted for family use.

WHEN WILL
THE TIME COME?

Ogden, Utah, Sept. 19, 1896.

To the Editor of The Herald.
In mental and moral capacity and in surrounding circumstances, mankind is divided in a general way into four fairly well defined classes, although these classes blend into each other to some extent.

In framing or evolving a government of the people especially designed to secure, as far as possible, the welfare and happiness of all its members, all of these classes must be taken into consideration in the best possible manner.

The first class consists of those who are incapable of taking care of themselves. The second class are those who, partly on account of the first class, are in circumstances that they must either make the best of life as a sacrifice, or deliberately crush the deepest affections and holiest impulses of human nature.

The third class are those who may or may not have talents, but are without particular direction, who may or may not be actuated by the best intentions, but who are without the power or unhampered to make such use of their time and abilities as they choose, with a view to the service of their fellow-men.

The fourth class are those who, by their great wealth and to those who, by their selfish or generous, scrupulous or unscrupulous, possess almost unlimited facilities for acquiring wealth.

Under our present system, it can hardly be denied that all other aims and aspirations are, to a greater or less degree, subordinated to the ambition to acquire wealth. And, indeed, it could not well be otherwise. Without money, there is hardly a possibility of political preference.

Money means independence; money means recognition; money means power; money means ease and luxury for ourselves and families. To the educated, money means travel in foreign countries; it means all there is of music, art, literature; in short, it means nearly everything that makes life worth living.

It all amounts to a tremendous premium set upon those qualities of mind and heart that make a man a money-getter. The logical consequence is that some men and some families become thoroughbreds, so to speak, in the acquisition of money, and many of those who seek to emulate them without the opportunities or talents to do so successfully, commit the crimes in the catalogue in their mad efforts.

But is the thoroughbred money-maker the best type of man?
Men have learned to cultivate the best qualities of animals and plants under the most carefully selected conditions. Human beings alone are left to the mercy of the inexorable law of natural selection or the survival of the fittest under the most unfavorable conditions.

It all amounts to a tremendous premium set upon those qualities of mind and heart that make a man a money-getter. The logical consequence is that some men and some families become thoroughbreds, so to speak, in the acquisition of money, and many of those who seek to emulate them without the opportunities or talents to do so successfully, commit the crimes in the catalogue in their mad efforts.

social conditions of this do not obtain, and where he may receive some compensation for his sufferings by the aid of the law.

But for these reasons, the fiery scenery of the pit and the ingenious tortures of the damned, as portrayed in the theologies of the world and the legends of the people, would be a relief to the terrible monotony of the poor man's existence.

Under existing conditions, are not fatherhood and motherhood, even under the holy bonds of matrimony, almost a crime to a large number of people in this land?

If the few are to be rich and the millions are to remain in servitude, the idea of popular education is wrong and illogical. If, as it must be, the condition of mankind is to be such that the ignorant are to be the victims of the cunning, the less one of these victims of poverty knows, the more contented and happy he is. Why create in him a knowledge of the world beyond his reach, or awake in him a longing for better things? He may have the quick fancy and voluble heart of a child, and yet incur the danger of making a socialist or an anarchist. It is folly to create a desire where there is no possibility of its being a corresponding gratification.

Many are great with a greatness immeasurably greater than that of the great Dives. Even in the deepest first of the four classes into which we have divided mankind (those who are incapable of taking care of themselves), may there not be found genius which, if cultivated and sheltered like a tender exotic plant, might sing as Milton sang, paint as Raphael painted, or pierce with the eye of a Newton into the most profound secrets of the universe? Many of them are helpless only under the law of the survival of the fittest as applied in our system to the masses of mankind.

The popular idea that every man has a right to do what he will with his own, is largely sentimental. The liep that devours a child in the edge of the forest, commits no offense against the laws of either God or man. In fact he may be a very respectable and well-intentioned lion. And yet the man who shoots him could hardly be held to have committed a crime. Here steps in the law of self-preservation, which is admitted to be above all other laws. The very magnitude of material possessions, with which one has a right to do as he will, may be a menace to the lives and welfare of thousands.

It is not possible that a Republican form of government may be so perfected that under its beneficent influence, like the sun's free and glorious opportunity will be offered for the growth and maturity of all forms of excellence, and under whose strong and purifying light the dark weeds of poisonous recesses where the rank weeds of monopoly flourish, shall become warm and mellow, and bear the flowers and fruits of health and contentment may blossom and ripen?

It may be that in the fullness of time, when the common people awake to the fact that law-abiding robbers may do exist, and have learned to believe that the poor and the weak are to be crushed in the name of God that wealth is bound to respect, that the constitution and laws may be so adjusted that there shall be such vast premium placed upon the qualities of the genius Sup, that those who are incapable of such qualities, or of themselves may be assisted to develop and use, for their own good and the good of the state, whatever of talent or bodily strength they may possess, and that they be clothed without humiliation, that those who find themselves called upon to bear burdens without honor, shall be able to rest upon them further than to serve their own ends, may be asked to assume somewhat of the burdens of common humanity, that that class of men who now control the great banking houses and monopolies of the nation may be curbed and controlled like any other monstrous force in nature, and their abnormal powers used, like the wild strength of Niagara, for the good of the race.

Such a government would be an approximate realization of the teachings of Christ on earth.

Something to Depend On.
Mr. James Jones, of the drug firm of Jones & Son, Cowden, Ill., in speaking of Dr. King's New Discovery, says that his wife, who was afflicted with the grippe, and her case grew so serious that physicians at Cowden and Pana could do nothing for her. It seemed to develop into a heavy Consumption. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in store, and selling lots of it, he took a bottle home, and to the surprise of all she began to get better from the first.

Free to Every Man

The Prescription of a Great Remedy Which Cured Him After Everything Else Failed.

Painful diseases are had enough, but when a man is slowly wasting away with nervous weakness, the mental forebodings are ten times worse than the most severe pain. There is no let up to the mental suffering day or night. Sleep is almost impossible, and under such a strain men are secretly responsible for what they do. For years the writer rolled and tossed on the troubled sea of weak nerves, and there are a few things which he had not better take a dose of poison and thus end all his troubles. But providential inspiration came to his aid in the shape of a combination of medicines that not only completely restored his general health but enlarged his weak, enervated parts to natural size and vigor, and he now declares that any man who will take the trouble to send his name and address may have the prescription of this wonderful remedy free. Now, when I say free, I mean absolutely without cost, because I want every weakened man to get the benefit of my experience.

I am not a philanthropist, nor do I pose as an enthusiast, but there are thousands of men suffering the mental tortures of weakened manhood who would be cured at once could they but get such a remedy as the one that cured me. Send me your name and address today. Do not try to study out how I can afford to pay the few postage stamps necessary to mail the prescription, but send for the remedy at once. I will send it to you at once on earth that although they cost nothing to get they are worth a fortune to some men and mean a lifetime of happiness to most of us. Write to Thomas Slater, Box 226, Kalamazoo, Mich., and the prescription will be mailed in a plain sealed envelope.
